

THE PRESIDENT'S CONDITION.

There comes the cheering news in our special dispatches from Washington that the President's symptoms are more favorable and that there is a growing hope that he will recover. He is more cheerful than he was yesterday, his pulse is more natural, there is less pain in the feet, and he takes nourishment more readily. Dr. Bliss is more sanguine than ever that the President will recover. This cheering news will fill the homes of millions with joy and gladness.

THE REPUBLICAN PARTY IN THE HOUR OF TROUBLE.

The terrible affliction which has visited this country in the attempted assassination of President Garfield, for the time being has well nigh obliterated all the party lines. From Democrats as well as Republicans come expressions of profound regret. Each party realizes the bold fact that it would be an unfortunate thing for the country to have a change take place under the present circumstances. Vice President Arthur may make a very excellent President, but that is not the question. The manner of taking of President Garfield, the fact that there would be a complete change in the administration, would unsettle business and create a deep discontent, and for these reasons it is of vital importance to the country that President Garfield should live.

But what will be the effect of this calamity upon the Republican party? There certainly can be no factions in the Republican party now. It is no time to quarrel. It is no time to wage a personal war in New York over the senatorship. There will be no such a thing as half-breeds or stalwarts, or featherheads or bucks. There will be one Republican party, and a rapid wheel into line and an unbroken column. When, in 1861, the blow was struck at the very vitals of this country, and when the slave power attempted to tear in fragments the constitution and to dissolve the Union, there was a quick front face by all the patriots in the land, and the Republican party became as one man. It will become as one man in the trying hour of the attempted assassination of President Garfield. We predict it will put an end to the bitterness in New York and will speedily settle the sectional question.

Whatever differences of opinion there may have been on that question, we believe there will be none now. In the hour of trouble the Republican party has been, and will still be, equal to the emergency. It has been through many a trying ordeal, and through the present one it will come out stronger and better than ever. Should the Vice President be called to the chair by the death of President Garfield, the duty of the Republican party is plain. There would be but one thing to do, and that would be to give the administration of Mr. Arthur earnest and united support. To do otherwise in an hour like this would be not only treachery to the party, but a crime against the country. Every Republican and every Democrat is expected to do his duty in a crisis of this kind, and if this be done, whatever may be the fate of the Chief Executive the government will still live.

THE WORDS OF GARFIELD IN 1865.

The darkest day this country ever saw was Saturday morning, April 15, 1865. The news flashed over the wires to every town and city in the land that Lincoln was dead. In New York the excitement was wild enough to buffet all description. It was the bursting of the passion of the different elements which had met on Wall street. There were tens of thousands there, and all mad. On the one hand there were deep mutterings that they were glad Lincoln was dead, on the other hand came shouts like a tornado for vengeance. It was a dark hour for New York, because there were recklessness and madness in the people. Threats were made to destroy the copperhead newspaper offices, and every minute increased the rage and the number of the crowd. But when it became apparent that there would be a general outbreak and the raging sea of passion would do its worst, a man rose in that mighty crowd and commanded silence, and then said so as to be heard by the thousands:

FELLOW CITIZENS: Clouds and darkness are round about him! His position is the dark waters and thick clouds of the sky! Justice and judgment are the habitation of his throne. Mercy and truth shall go before him! Fellow citizens, God reigns, and the government at Washington still lives!

There was tremendous power in these words, and they were spoken by James A. Garfield. The crowd went back. The terrible shouts were turned to gentle whispers. Fury was drawn from the fringes, and the men who bore themselves like demons, became under the great words of Garfield, men of thought and sobriety, and the hand of the mob was staid. The people in this extremely critical hour, should remember the words of the President uttered in 1865.

The question now arises and is being pretty earnestly and generally discussed, relative to the condition of the government in case both Garfield and Arthur should die before the assembling of Congress. The constitution provides that in case of the removal, death, resignation or inability of both the President and Vice President, Congress shall declare what officer shall then act as President, and the officer so designated by Congress shall serve until a President shall be elected. A law of Congress provides that should the President and Vice President die, the President pro tem of the Senate shall act as President, and if there be none, then the Speaker of the House. Beyond this, no provision has been made by Congress. At present there is no President of the Senate and no Speaker of the House. Should the President and the Vice President be removed by death, the government would be without an executive head until one could be elected.

The Republican State convention will probably be called for the first week in September. Mr. Baker, chairman of the State committee, has talked with a number of the members of the committee, and they are in favor of the time mentioned. Mr. Baker says the general opinion seems to be "that along about the 1st of September is early enough; and indeed I have not met anyone as yet who favors a date in advance of that time. There is not a great deal of local political work to do in any of the cities or counties, and there is no need of a long canvass."

For some time past General Fairchild of this State, Minister to Spain, has been asked to be recalled, and according to his request, President Garfield on the night before the attempted assassination, appointed ex-Vice President Hamlin, to fill that important mission. Mr. Hamlin is now 72 years old, but he has a rugged frame and a strong mind, and is not incapable on account of age to fill a good office. He has been in office a little over forty years continuously, and is good for several more.

A GLOOMY ANNIVERSARY.

The One Hundred and Fifth Anniversary in Washington.

WASHINGTON, July 4.—The 105th anniversary of the declaration of the nation's independence was a sad one in Washington to-day. But from the elegant flags floating from the masts on the public buildings and the crowds of department clerks on the streets, one would not have observed that the business of the day opened as the dawn of a Sabbath morn. There was no sound of the booming cannon, nor the pomp of military parade. The President lay at the point of death, and the solemn silence was profound. Instead of the happy faces and joyous demonstrations which signaled the celebration of a patriotic people, there were painful greetings and subdued inquiries as to the fate of the people's chief. It was a 15th of April rather than a 4th of July. The assassination, instead of celebration, was the theme of the day. The small boy, with his fire cracker and torpedo, for once was not to be seen, and the police made it their especial business to prevent noise and confusion among those lacking respect for the sad circumstances of the day.

The center of interest of course, was the White House. The sun poured down with intense power, the concrete pavement reflecting the heat as from the surface of a furnace. Scarcely a breath of air was stirring, and the sultriness of the atmosphere was the most unfavorable sign of the day.

About 5 o'clock this morning word was conveyed to the reporters of the newspapers that bulletins would be sent down stairs as soon as they were issued. At midnight all the members of the cabinet were in the White House, but the demands of nature for rest were so imperative upon the President's ministers as her demands for repose upon the part of the suffering chief.

Along in the small hours of the morning Secretaries Blaine and Windom and Attorney General MacVeagh went to their home to obtain some sleep. Mrs. Blaine, Colonel Rockwell, Major Swain, Colonel Corbin, and Messrs. James, Hunt, and Kirkwood remained on the watch.

Arrangements were made, in case anything serious occurred, to summon the absent members of the cabinet.

UNPROVOKED MURDER.

A Chicago Murderer Gives Three Reasons for Murdering His Wife.

Chicago, July 4.—The murder by John Cunningham of his wife was a dastardly unprovoked, cold-blooded affair. He dragged her from the bed and stabbed her again and again. He says, in talking of his crime, first, that he did not commit the deed; second, that he did it because she was unfaithful; and third, that he didn't know what he was doing, he having just had an attack of delirium tremens.

THE WOUND.

WASHINGTON, July 2.—A correct diagnosis of the President's wound was made public about 8 o'clock. The ball, which was of very large size, having been shot from a forty-four calibre English bull-dog pistol, entered the right side of the President about three and a half inches to the right of the spinal column, a short distance below the ribs. Its course was not then determined, and the doctors thought that the fatality of the wound depended upon whether it had opened the cavity of the abdomen or injured the spinal column. If it had not done this, there was a fair prospect for his recovery.

THE ASSASSIN.

CHICAGO, July 4.—Charles J. Guiteau, the President's assassin, was a Chicago lawyer known within a small circle as a very queer personage. He had an office on the corner of Washington and Clark streets and boarded at the Clifton house. He had but little practice, if he had any, and was chiefly known for his idiosyncrasies. During the first part of his residence here he was recognized as a harmless kind of fellow, quiet in his ways but full of crochets. He lived a self-contained life and was morose, and it was with difficulty that even his friends could get him to talk. When he did engage in conversation it was in such an incoherent and disjointed manner that it would impress everyone with whom he came in contact. Later on he went to New York, and, failing to pay his board bill, was thrown into prison. He then became a monomaniac on the second coming of Christ; wrote to the papers on the subject, delivered several lectures in different parts of the country, and wrote a book entitled "The Truth: A Companion to the Bible." The New York Herald ridiculed him, and he instituted a suit for damages against the paper. Soon after he returned to Chicago, and then it was evident to all his friends that he had gone mad. He was arrested for embezzling money from a client, and was incarcerated in the jail, but nothing was ever done in his case.

Guiteau was known by all his acquaintances as a crazy dead-beat. He lived by borrowing money from friends for a long time, as he certainly had no practice or means of support. Guiteau was a graduate of the Michigan university, and is well connected. He is of French descent. His father, it is said, is president of the Second National Bank, of Freeport, Ill. The reason for his departure from Illinois was the accumulation of his financial difficulties.

CONKLING.

Scenes at the Fifth Avenue Hotel Yesterday—Conkling and His Friends.

NEW YORK, July 4.—From the Tribune: The critical condition of President Garfield yesterday attracted a large number of persons to the Fifth Avenue Hotel to learn the latest news from the bulletin. The crowd was much greater than Sunday and continued during the day.

It was also noticeable there were more politicians, especially stalwarts present than at any time before since the President was shot. Ex-Secretary Hamilton Fish called on Conkling and remained closeted with him a long time. Conkling did not leave his room during the day, except for a short time when he appeared in the hotel corridor and conversed with friends. He received a dispatch from General Horace Porter asking him to come to Long Branch, but declined not to leave the city for the present unless President Garfield should die, when he would go to Washington. Police Commissioner French, John F. Smyth and ex-Senator Platt are almost constant companions of Conkling, during the present trying time. He is said to be deeply moved by the many expressions of opinion condemning his course as having led to the utmost feeling of bitterness and malignity and hatred of the President. Conkling's friends were very uneasy over such expressions of opinion and denounced them.

A SIMILAR CASE.

BURLINGTON, Ia., July 4.—Burlington furnishes a parallel case to that of the President in the person of John L. Pierson, secretary of Burlington lumber company, who was sergeant in company G, Twenty-fifth Iowa Infantry, and wounded by a gun shot penetrating the liver at the battle of Walnut Hills, Miss. By careful nursing and skillful treatment he recovered, and is now in business in Burlington.

RAILROAD ACCIDENT.

CINCINNATI, July 4.—Seven persons were killed and twelve wounded by an accident on the Kentucky Central railroad 12 miles south of Covington this afternoon. All were residents of Covington. The names of the killed are Jos. P. Rice, Michael Dixon, Wm. Collopy, William Wirehauf, John Cotton and two boys, names unknown, stealing a ride. It was a collision on the South Lexington express with a picnic excursion which was backing north for another load. The train dispatcher ordered Conductor Frank Matlack to a side track at Culbertson station to let the picnic train pass and gave orders to back to Matlack. The engineer forgot them and passed the station.

BIG BLAZE.

Notwithstanding Flouring Mill a Total Wreck—The Loss and Insurance.

About 4 o'clock this morning fire totally destroyed the stone flouring mill of Notthom Bros., at Monterey, as well as the frame building opposite, owned and occupied by them, and which was formerly the batting factory. One span of the bridge was so badly burned that the fire department could not get across, and could not use their hose to advantage. The cause of the fire is unknown, and the loss is not definitely known though the Notthom brothers think it will reach $30,000. The following is the insurance on the mill and machinery, it being divided equally between Dimock & Hayner's agency, and that of Mark Ripley:

Hartford.....	$ 2,000
Home.....	2,000
Lavender.....	2,500
North British & Mercantile.....	1,500
Phoenix.....	1,500
St. Paul.....	1,500
German American.....	1,500
Total.....	$15,000

Besides this there was on the wooden building and the stock and machinery contained therein, $1,000 in the Phoenix, and a like sum in the North British and Mercantile on the stock in the stone mill. As the mill had not been run much since the damage by the floods, there was not much stock to lose, the loss being principally on buildings and machinery.
